Abstract

All studies show that a transformation occurs in the language of friendship as the child matures. Apart from the language used to describe friends and non-friends, children also use a certain language within the friendship relationships they have. Thus special attention should be paid to the transformations in the language that children use in their interactions with their friends. In this study we aim at identifying the relationship between the child's capacity to speak at an early age and his/her friendship relationships.

Keywords: friendship, language development
